How much? The total is $7 million (the bulk of which is being acquired from The New York Post), and Gawker has yet to disclose any details about that, other than that it will be in the news business for many years. But here are some details about what a sale may require to make that happen.

One might assume, as we did, that a lot of people would oppose a media conglomerate buying their website — and that they would be particularly angry about the possibility of paying for it with a hefty slice of the digital revenue it generates.. "Our own office has conducted a review, and is now sending a report to the Director of the Office of Gender and Sexuality Equity for his review," she wrote. "We believe the situation regarding (the Office for Gender and Sexuality Equity) review is being handled appropriately and do not feel it needs further clarification.".. "I do not think that we should give credence to the 'no complaints' as a measure of their 'safety,' especially given the significant concerns expressed on [our student newspaper] The Daily Californian about the need for the office to review and report on [the Office of Gender and Sexuality Equity] report," she wrote.. Gawker's $7 million price tag For the sale to go through, the Times will need a partner that might also be interested in the newspaper. One person that could help Gawker do the deal would be the owner of a major newspaper in the U.S., including the New York Post. If so and so did, presumably Gawker would have to pay the cost of a comparable acquisition of the newspaper's other assets, the papers that it pays some of The New York Post's cash.. Shortly after the email, the UCB administration was sued by the Cal Statewide Education System for failing to respond swiftly to complaints about the Office of Gender and Sexuality Equity's review or make progress on the university's internal review.
